

INGERSOLL CLOSES.

The Star Route Orator Concludes His Argument for the Defendants.

He Appeals to the Jury for "the Mercy of an Honest Verdict."

"Nothing Beneath the Stars so Profoundly Sad as the Wreck of a Human Being."

The Colonel's Associate Counsel Pay Him a High Compliment.

Mr. Ingersoll continued his address to the star route jury yesterday. He again turned to Mr. Biles' speech and replied to his charges.

Dorsey knew that Rordell was a diseased man, and powerful for harm. He shrunk from indictment; all sensitive men did, because even a verdict of not guilty did not entirely remove the stain. He was a man of reputation, second to no man in the land in political power, and did not want his reputation smirched by an indictment.

The defense had not produced their books and papers because they did not wish that man (Rordell) to examine them and fortify his testimony. Otherwise, he never would have crossed himself, never would have mixed up the checks and stub books. That alone justified the refusal. Then the court had refused to allow the defense to produce the books to contradict Rordell, but the offer had never been made.

Then, said Mr. Ingersoll, the prosecution wanted to know why the defense had not called Rordell. The prosecution had subpoenaed him; they seemed to have an affection for him. They got out of the stand, and tried to arrest him in the dead of night.

Well, they put Rordell on the stand, continued Mr. Ingersoll, and he absolutely contradicted their witness, Rordell.

Mr. Ingersoll then took up the defense of Miner. The only things against him were the petitions, and he proceeded to account for them by a theory perfectly, to him, consistent with innocence.

During the case the crowd filed into the court room, so that every corner was filled when Mr. Ingersoll resumed his argument. He said it was a government doctrine that a contractor agreed that Brady should fine him and then return half of the fine. Fine bargain that. Quite an inducement to Brady to fine him. What man would thus place himself in the power of another? The papers answered that doctrine. It was not worth arguing. It had been constantly thrown out that Dorsey's blindness was assumed; and that, too, after three of the most eminent physicians of this city had made affidavits that at least eleven-twelfths of his eyesight had been lost. The government subpoenaed Dr. Marston, but did not dare to put him on the stand. It seemed that they had exhausted themselves in the effort to place their foot upon the neck of S. W. Dorsey. Never as long as the world swings in its orbit would they find two honest men to convict Stephen W. Dorsey.

This government might use all of its power; all the brains that its money could hire; it could poison the entire newspaper press; bring on its witnesses; but its witnesses, but it gave them notice that they never would do it. Let them spend their millions; they would never reach that end. As long as the average of men ran one or two true men to a dozen they never would do it. They changed that Dorsey published his affidavit in the New York Herald to his public opinion. Was Mr. Dickson, the foreman of the jury in the first trial, indicted to bias public opinion?

Mr. Merrick objected that there was no evidence of that fact, and the court forbade a reference to Mr. Dickson's case.

Mr. Ingersoll took it back; he believed that the jury had at least a vague idea of what the department of justice was doing.

Mr. Ingersoll, after an argument in defense of J. W. Dorsey, Vail, and the other defendants, made a rapid summary of the evidence, as it appeared to him, and concluded with the following peroration, delivered with great solemnity and authority:

Now, gentlemen, the responsibility is with you. Their fate is in your hands. In your keeping is everything they love. Everything they hold dear is in your power. With this fearful responsibility you have no right to listen to the whisper of a caprice. You have no right to hearken to the promptings of fear. Beware of prejudice. Look to the testimony alone. Be not convinced by the last argument; listen not to epithets instead of facts. Recall the names of the defendants. Put the evidence in the scale and then have the honor and manhood to say which scale goes down. We ask from you the mercy of an honest verdict. That is all we want—the verdict of your honesty. It is for you to say whether these defendants shall live with honor among their fellow citizens. Whether they shall live in the free air, or be taken from their wives, from their children, from their friends, from all they hold dear. It is for you to say whether they shall be clothed with honor or with shame. Whether their day shall end without a single star in all the sky of eternal night; whether they shall be branded as criminals.

After all that they have suffered; after they have been pursued by the government as no defendants have before been pursued, it is for you to say whether their homes shall be blasted by the lightning of a false verdict. You must say whether their future shall be one of agony, of grief, of tears.

Nothing beneath the stars of heaven is so profoundly sad as the wreck of a human being. Nothing is so profoundly mournful as a home covered with shame. The things are infinitely sad as the thing that shall cast a stain upon children yet unborn. It is for you to say whether this shall be a verdict or one in accordance with the law and the facts.

The prosecution is heated with the chase, they are excited by the hunt; but I will say that in the end they will be a thousand times better pleased with a verdict of not guilty than with what they ask. They would enjoy their victory; they would like success, and they would have you give to those aspirations greater weight than to homes, and wives, and children.

I want a verdict that will relieve my clients from the agony of two long years; a verdict that will lift them from the cloud. A verdict that will fill the coming days and nights with joy. A verdict that will fill their minds with a sense of joy and of gratitude forever to you, one and all.

Many ladies were weeping quietly when Mr. Ingersoll sat down, and all of the spectators were visibly affected.

The court inquired if the defense would make further argument. Mr. Henkle said that Mr. Ingersoll had made the unanimous choice of the defense as their representative, and with what grand results he would leave the court and spectators to bear witness. He denied positively that there was any truth in the published statements to the effect that the defendants had disagreed about the argument among themselves, and said that his only reason for waiving his right to argue was a feeling of tenderness toward the jury, who had suffered from their long confinement. He endorsed everything that Mr. Ingersoll had said, and left his clients to the jury.

Mr. Davidge regretted that Mr. Ingersoll had not left uncompleted a single subject for argument. He had covered the whole field with such matchless ability and eloquence that he had no ground for adding to his argument. He had so fully uncovered the origin of this so-called prosecution and the character and weight of the evidence upon which conviction was sought that he could add nothing but his grateful indorsement. The arguments for the defense were closed.

The court I shall expect the government to commence the closing argument on Monday.

Mr. Merrick. I hope that it will not be long after Monday when we close.

The court. We cannot hope for a very brief argument; you have so much matter.

Mr. Merrick. A number to answer, but not much matter. I shall not be long.

A SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY.

A New and Most Important Theory on One of the Most Vital Questions of the Day.

If anyone had informed Queen Elizabeth in her palatial days that she could have conversed with Sir Walter Raleigh in his North Carolina home, receiving a reply from him within an hour's time, she would have declared it to be a miracle. And yet, had they lived in the present day, this apparent miracle would most readily have been witnessed and not seem at all strange or unnatural. The truth is, new principles are coming into existence, and the operation of many laws unknown in the past is being fully understood in the present. In no way does this fact come more forcibly to the mind than in the case and treatment of the human body. Millions of people have died in past ages from some insignificant or easily controlled cause which is thoroughly understood now and readily handled.

Consumption during the entire past has been considered an incurable disease. And yet it is demonstrated that it has been and can be cured, even after it has had a long run. Dr. Felix Oswald has just contributed a notable article on this subject to the Popular Science Monthly. He regards consumption as pulmonary irritation. The impurities of the blood produce a constant irritation in the lungs, thus destroying their delicate tissues and causing death. His theory shows conclusively that consumption is a blood disease. It has its origin primarily in a diseased condition of the kidneys or liver, the two organs of the body, aside from the lungs, that purify the blood. When the kidneys or liver are diseased they are in a sore or lacerated state which communicates poison to every corner of blood that passes through them. This poisonous blood circulates through the system and comes to the lungs, where the poison is deposited, causing decomposition in the finely formed cells of the lungs. Any diseased part of the body has contaminating power, and yet the blood, which is the life of the system, is brought into direct contact with these poisoned organs, thus carrying contagion to all parts of the body. Bishop Jesse T. Beck, D.D., L.L.D., whose death has been so recently regretted, is reported to have died with pneumonia, which medical authorities affirm indicates a diseased condition of the kidneys. It is well known, moreover, that for several years he has been the victim of severe kidney trouble, and the pneumonia which finally terminated his life was only the last result of the previous blood poisoning. The deadly matter which is left in the lungs by the impure blood, and finally chokes the patient. When this is accomplished rapidly it is called pneumonia or quick consumption; when slowly, consumption; but in any event it is the result of impure blood, caused by diseased kidneys and liver.

These are facts of science, and vouched for by all the leading physicians of the day. They show the desirability—nay, the necessity, of keeping these most important organs in perfect condition, not only to insure health, but also to escape death. It has been fully shown to the satisfaction of nearly every unprejudiced mind, that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is the only known remedy that can cure and keep in health the best blood-purifying organs of the body. It acts directly upon these members, healing all ulcers which may have formed in them and placing them in a condition to purify and not poison the blood. This is no idle statement nor false theory. Mr. W. C. Beach, foreman of the Buffalo, N. Y., Rubber Type foundry, was given up to die by both physicians and friends. For four years he had a terrible cough, accompanied by night sweats, chills, and all the well known symptoms. He spent a season south and found no relief. He says: "I finally concluded to try Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. In three months I gained twenty pounds, recovered my lost energy and my health was fully restored." The list could be prolonged indefinitely, but enough has been said to prove to every sufferer from pulmonary troubles that there is no reason to be discouraged in the least, and that health can be restored.

Southern Memorial Association.
A meeting of the Southern Memorial association was held at the board of trade rooms at noon yesterday, which was called to order by the president, Dr. A. Y. P. Garnett, with H. W. Garnett secretary. A resolution was adopted appropriating the money in the treasury for the use of the North Carolina association, and in remembrance of the Confederate soldiers of North Carolina at Arlington to their native state. The association then adjourned, and a special meeting was held, with Mr. John W. Drow in the chair, to take action in regard to the death of Dr. Ashford.

The following resolutions were adopted:
Resolved, That in the death of Dr. Ashford this association has sustained the loss of a most valued member, in whom it was proud to have a friend, a sympathizing companion, and a gentleman devoted to duty, principle, and honor.

Resolved, That as an association, we lament the loss of a member who stood ready at all times to assist in the sacred duty for which we organized. And as men, we mourn for an associate who risked his life for the cause he believed to be right, never hesitated to risk popularity or interest by avowing his sympathy with that cause and those who fell in its defense.

Resolved, That this community has in his death lost a citizen whose ability and integrity of character secured the admiration and esteem of all his fellow-citizens.

Resolved, That we offer our sincere condolence with the bereaved family for their loss, and tender them our deepest sympathy.

Resolved, That the Virginia journals be requested to publish these proceedings.

Dr. A. Y. P. Garnett then delivered an eloquent eulogy upon the late Dr. Ashford, which deeply impressed his audience. The association then adjourned.

Yesterday's Boating on the Potomac.
The boating fraternity was out in great numbers yesterday, the Potomacs sending out their eight-oared and two-four-oared shell crews. McKenny, McLean, Kearney, Norcross, and Roberts in singles, and ten pleasure boats; from the Columbia, were Wade and Smith in singles, two four-oared shell crews, two pair-oared, the ten-oared barge with a large number of lady passengers, and nine pleasure boats. From Johnson & Baker's, Somers, of the Plate Printers' Rowing association, has commenced his practice in single working boat, and does not appear to have lost any by his winter's rest.

McKenny, in his last pull on the Potomac, prior to the Newark regatta, appeared to be in excellent condition, and rowed in splendid style; he had a brush last evening with one of the Potomac fours, and hung them closely from off the fish wharf to the Potomac boat-house. He leaves this evening for Newark.

STRICKEN DOWN.
A foe Against Whom Bolts and Bars are Useless—A Story of Society.

To prevent disease is always easier and cheaper than to cure it. This axiom is true as it is old. At present the leading peril to health and life in the United States is in Malaria—or bad air. Malaria is a broad name for many diseases. It has a multitude of shapes, but only one nature and result. Included in this family are bilious fever, typhoid and typhus fevers, chills and fever, and all diseases which originate in blood poisoning. There is no other force so insidious as malaria. It attacks the poor in their cabins and the rich in their palaces. The scientific plumb of which the wealthy seek to keep this pest out of their houses fails as completely as the charms with which superstitious people try to ward off the influence of evil spirits. Malaria enters where it will and vital statistics and saddened homes complete the dismal story. Malaria permeates the atmosphere and strikes down victims in all classes of society.

What can be done? He who furnishes preventive or a remedy is surely a greater friend to his kind than he who discovers a new gold mine. The proprietors of HENSON'S CAPSINE POROUS PLASTER recommend them as the most effective and trustworthy anti-malaria specific now known to medical science. The mode of action is easily understood. They act upon the liver, spleen, bowels, and kidneys through the skin, assisting these organs to throw off the poison. Thousands can testify to their efficacy in aiding the struggling system to cast off its load. Formed of a happy combination of chemical agents, these plasters do their work quickly and surely. If worn over the region of the liver and upon the back over the kidneys they act as a preventive against malarial attacks. The genuine have the word CAPSINE cut in the center of the plaster. Any pharmacist or druggist will supply you. Price 25 cents.
